The 5 Rules

Mission • Core • Values • Truth • Oath • Effort

- 1. Remember – it's fine to be loyal to individuals, but the mission comes first – always. No single individual is more important than the mission.
- 2. You must possess an unwavering allegiance to the core values of our organization. They transcend even my authority as your Police Chief.
- 3. Tell 100% of the truth 100% of the time.
- 4. Honor the oath you took and everything it stands for. It is one of the most important promises you'll ever make in your life, so don't break it.
- 5. Give your best effort every day. As the days pass, your effort and your overall work as a police officer will get better and better. The people you serve deserve nothing less.

Professional success within the Knightdale Police Department is not determined by a complicated set of policies or regulations. Instead, it is driven by a strict adherence to a handful of simple but important directives referred to as “The Five Rules.” These simple missives provide an overarching framework for performance, behavior, and organizational culture.

Follow these rules, and everything else falls into place.
